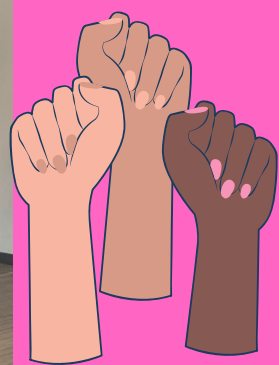
It's Probably Thrush!

Raising awareness for Endometriosis

1 in 10 women suffer from Endometrosis. We wanted to share stories of symptoms and hopefully have some women to recognise symptoms and get diagnosed.

We did a morning and afternoon session to a group of refugees and vulnerable young adults and the second to women who suffer from Endometrosis and professional actors, to kick start conversations and discuss the illness with different groups of individuals.

Also with raising awarneess, we wanted to make our performance and workshop free and accessible. We were so lucky to have a groups of diverse people that wouldn't normally go to the theatre, so we were delighted to give them the opportunity.


Presenting our play and having a workshop of discussions was imperative to raise awareness and push for more visibility about this illness.
